01. What legislation, guidance and/or policies govern a workplace investigation?

Pursuant to article 98 of the Portuguese Labour Code, the employer has a disciplinary power over its employees during the employment period. This is enforced through the initiation of disciplinary procedures – which can include a preliminary workplace investigation as provided for in article 352(1) of the Portuguese Labour Code – and ultimately the application of sanctions laid down by law or in an applicable collective bargaining agreement.

The Portuguese Labour Code governs disciplinary procedures, which can include a preliminary workplace investigation, in two different sections. On the one hand, articles 328 to 332 establish general rules regarding the imposition of disciplinary sanctions; statutory deadlines and statutes of limitations involved; decision criteria; penalties; and disciplinary records. On the other hand, articles 351 to 358 lay down the rules applicable to dismissals with cause, which are also widely understood to be applicable concerning conservatory sanctions (i.e. those that enable the continuity of the employment relationship).

Additionally, collective bargaining agreements may provide for different disciplinary penalties, as long as the rights and guarantees of employees are not impaired.

Workplace investigations must also abide by the general rules laid down in the Portuguese Constitution, Portuguese Civil Code and Data Protection Laws (including guidelines issued by the Data Protection Agency), as regards the personal rights of the employees.

There is no specific legal regulation for internal investigations in Switzerland. The legal framework is derived from general rules such as the employer's duty of care, the employee's duty of loyalty and the employee's data protection rights. Depending on the context of the investigation, additional legal provisions may apply; for instance, additional provisions of the Swiss Federal Act on Data Protection or the Swiss Criminal Code.

23. Should the investigation report be shared in full, or just the findings?

If the employee is accused by the employer, they will be entitled to consult the entire investigation report and not just the findings, as well as the witnesses' depositions, which should be in writing, and any other sources of information that were used by the employer

Even though the law is silent in this respect, courts have ruled that if this is not complied with, the employee's right of defence would be deemed to be disrespected.

In principle, there is no obligation to disclose the final investigation report. Disclosure obligations may arise based on data protection law vis-à-vis the persons concerned (eg, the accused). Likewise, there is no obligation to disclose other documents, such as the records of interviews. The employee should be fully informed of the final investigation report, if necessary, with certain redactions (see question 22). The right of the employee concerned to information is comprehensive (ie, all investigation files must be disclosed to him).^[1] Regarding publication to other bodies outside of criminal proceedings, the employer is bound by its duty of care (article 328, Swiss Code of Obligations) and must protect the employee as far as is possible and reasonable.^[2]
